The systematic and historical study of Islamic Jurisprudence is still in its infancy. For this a thorough knowledge of the texts of recognized authority is indispensable. It is well known that very few such texts have been critically edited or translated, thus putting special difficulties in the way of the student of fiqh. And the difficulty of research in Shi'ite law is greater : for, although printed editions and translations of some of the principal Sunnite texts are available, Shi'ite books are far more difficult to obtain and their law is therefore much less known. Many of their texts are still in manuscript ; such as are printed (for instance, Persian lithographs), are not easily obtained. And coming to Ismā'ilis, the difficulties seem at first to be insuperable ; for Ismā'ili Law, as Ismailism generally, is almost a sealed book to western scholars.

The Da'ā'imu'l-Islām is an ancient and authoritative Ismā'ili text, important from several aspects ; religious, ethical, social, legal. And the study of law cannot in these days be dissevered from that of religion, ethics, history, and sociology ; for ' Law streams from the soul of a people like national poetry, it is as holy as the national religion, it grows and spreads like language ; religious, ethical, and poetical elements all contribute to its vital force '.¹ I had therefore undertaken some years ago, to edit and translate that portion of the Da'ā'im which deals with civil law and is to this day applicable to the Western Ismā'ilis in India. It has not been possible to proceed with the original plan with any degree of regularity for several reasons. In the first place, no co-operation can, with rare exceptions, be expected from the sectarians themselves, for they hide the Da'wat literature with an extraordinary zeal. In the next, reliable manuscripts are very difficult to obtain. In the humid climate of Bombay and Gujarat, the stronghold of the Western Ismā'īlis in India, it is rarely that one comes across a manuscript over three centuries old. Thus the reconstruction of the text is not an easy task, and at the end of one's labours the uneasy thought remains that it is impossible to say how far the text so edited differs from the one written originally by the author. And lastly, the work has been done intermittently, and the lack of leisure while following the exacting profession of the law has been keenly felt. In spite of every endeavour many defects must necessarily remain in work of this character, and the indulgence of the critical reader is therefore craved.

Instead of waiting for the whole of the work to be ready, which may take several years still, it has been thought fit to publish a small part of the whole, viz. the text with translation, notes and an introduction, of the Kitābu'l-Waṣāyā from the second volume of the Da'ā'im. The Kitābu'l-Waṣāyā (Book of Wills) consists of two parts; one religious, the other legal. In the first part, the testament of 'Alī I (§ 9) is of great interest from the purely religious and doctrinal point of view. It is also to be found in the third volume of the 'Uyūnu'l-Akhhbār of Saiyidnā 'Imādu'd-dīn Idrīs b. Ḥasan, and is frequently referred to in the Da'wat books. The second part deals almost exclusively with legal questions. The biography of Qāḍī an-Nu'mān, written originally for being incorporated in the introduction, is now curtailed as it is about to appear in full in the pages of the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, London.

The publication of books and papers on oriental subjects is always a matter of difficulty, and my gratitude is due to the University of Bombay for contributing substantially towards the cost of the publication of this monograph. I should also like to acknowledge gratefully the assistance rendered to me in different ways by several Ismā'īlī scholars, most of whom, preferring to remain anonymous, have deprived me of the pleasure of mentioning them by name. But above all my sincerest thanks are due to my friend, Mr. W. Ivanow, late Assistant Keeper, Asiatic Museum of the Russian Academy of Sciences, St. Petersburg, whose exceptional knowledge of matters Ismā'ili was ever at my disposal. He not only read the manuscript and saved me from many a pitfall, but has laid me under a deep debt of gratitude by reading the proofs. My only regret is that as his masterly Guide to Ismaili Literature (R.A.S., London) is still in the press, I have been unable to give continuous references to it.

INTRODUCTION

I. THE BOOK AND ITS AUTHOR

The Book : Da'ā'imū'l-Islām

The principal source for the study of Ismā'īlī Law is the *Da'ā'imū'l-Islām*¹ of Qāḍī an-Nu'mān b. Muḥammad b. Ḥaiyūn,² died 363/974, and referred to as 'The Abū Ḥanīfa of the Shī'a'.³ The book is divided into two volumes: the first deals with 'ibādāt (religious duties), that is, imān (in the special Ismā'īlī sense), ṭahāra, ṣalāt, janā'iz, zakāt, ṣawm, ḥajj, and jihād; the second deals with mu'āmalāt (worldly affairs), and a glance at the contents⁴ shows that it consists mainly of what we now call legal topics. The chapter on Wills edited and translated below forms part of this volume.

Qāḍī an-Nu'mān was a very illustrious author and judge, and his reputation rests on numerous legal, polemical, religious, and historical works. Some of the legal works attributed to him, and which are used to this day, are Mukhtaṣaru'l-Āthār (2 vols.), Kitābu'l-Yanbū', Kitābu'l-Iqtīṣār, and the Muntakhaba, which is a very brief statement of the law in metrical form. These four, together with a collection of scholia, the Kitābu'l-Hawāshī, attributed to Amīnī bin Jalāl, written by various hands and collected at a time unknown to me, are used to supplement and interpret the rules laid down in the Da'ā'im, which remains the paramount authority.¹

² I. Khall. iii. 565. But some MSS. have Ḥaiyān erroneously, حيوان or حيوان.

Till recently Ismailism was almost a sealed book, but of late it is attracting a great deal of attention among serious students of Islam. The meagreness of our knowledge can be judged from the bibliography prepared by Massignon some ten years ago, entitled 'Esquisse d'une Bibliographie Qarmate'.² The recent work of Ivanow,³—and particularly his forthcoming Guide to Ismaili Literature (R.A.S., London)—Hamdani,⁴ and Kraus,⁵ to take but a few examples, however, gives us the hope that many new treasures of esoteric knowledge and many a chapter of unknown and curious history may be opened up. But no one has so far touched on the development of law and of legal history among the Ismā'īlis. The study of law is important, in the first place, not merely for the purpose of discovering a rule of law in order to decide a point which has arisen in the course of a judicial proceeding, nor merely to satisfy one's curiosity about the detailed practices of one particular school, but because in many instances, legal doctrines reflect in an unmistakable manner the view society takes, at a particular time and under given conditions, of certain social problems. For, according to an illustrious modern jurist, 'law will never again be looked upon solely as a command, but as a function of society, which to be understood, must be considered in alliance with the study of the whole structure of society'.¹ The views of Qāḍī an-Nu'mān may differ from those of Manu or Savigny, Montesquieu or Bentham, Kemal or Lenin, and yet for understanding the social structure of the times, the close study of law and legal theory is indispensable. The Fatimid Caliphate in Egypt was a period of remarkable brilliance in many respects, and any facts which would throw a light on the social structure of those times would be most welcome. This is the aspect which attracts me most, and the study of the Da'ā'im has been undertaken principally for its human interest.

Secondly, in India at any rate, the Da'ā'im is a text applicable to a large and flourishing trading community of Western Ismā'ilīs, the Bohoras.² The Bohoras are to be

² The current spelling of the word is 'bohra', as the prevalent pronunciations are 'bohrā', 'bōrā', 'bōrī', 'vōrā' and even 'hōrā'. But etymologically bohōra (vohōra) is more correct. It is a word which means a merchant and is derived from the Gujarati 'vohōrvu', to trade. In the Arabicized Gujarati of the Bohoras, it is written بهورا and the plural is بواهر. Sometimes it is also written بهورة and بوهرية. The meaning of the word 'bohora' is clearly explained in a MS. belonging to the Bombay Branch R.A.S. See my Descriptive List of the Arab. Pers. and Urdu MSS. in BBRAS, 7. For further information see EI, i. 738; Bombay Gazetteer (1899) ix. Part ii, 25-34; R. E. Enthoven, Tribes and Castes of Bombay (1920) i. 197-208; and my Introduction to the Study of Mdn. Law, 32, notes 2 and 3. Much useful information divided into Dā'ūdīs, the richest and largest of these communities in India, the Sulaimānīs,¹ the so-called 'Alyās,² the Malaks of Nagpur, C.P.,³ the Nāgoshias,⁴ and last but not the least, the many dissenters from the authority of the dā'ī of the Dā'ūdīs, who although excommunicated, still preserve intact their belief in Ismā'īlī doctrines and assert that imān is a question of personal faith, and as such, no human being, not even the dā'ī, can possibly excommunicate them. Many of them are very learned, and in spite of persecution and difficulties,⁵ they may also be obtained from Gulzare Daudi by Mian Bhai Abuul Hussain (Burhanpur, C.P., 1920, p. 223). But reliance cannot be placed on it as it contains many errors and seems to be of a somewhat controversial nature. The Bohoras according to the Census of 1921, number 1,53,363 in India; out of which as many as 1,32,299 are to be found in the Bombay Presidency (1921, Census Report, vol. i, part ii, pp. 151 and 161).

² Called after one 'Alī who led the rebellion against the Da'wat, as it then was. Separated in 1624.

³ This community is mentioned in the Privy Council decision reported in (1930) 32 Bom. Law Rep., 1538.

⁴ Separated in 1789. Strict vegetarians, as their name implies. They are a very small community of converts from Hinduism of whom little is known.

⁵ Much information about these dissenters and their views may be obtained from the judgement in the recent 'Burhānpūr Dargāh Case', Suit No. 32 of 1925, Court of 1st Class Sub-Judge, Burhanpur, C.P. Seth Tayabali Mahomedali v. Mulla Abdulhusain and Others. The second defendant was the Mullaji Saheb, the dā'ī of the Dā'ūdīs, Sardar Syedna Taher Saifuddin. Judgement was delivered on 2 January 1931. I understand there is going to be an appeal. In this judgement it was held that a number of Dā'ūdī Bohoras do not believe in the present dā'ī as ad-Da'ī al-Muṭlaq, but merely as ad-Dā'ī an-Nāẓim. In § 40 of the judgement, another schism, the Mehdibagh sect, is also mentioned. They separated some time between 1309–1314 A.H., some 35 years ago.

keep up their religious independence and maintain the study of Arabic and Ḥaqā'iq.¹ To all these the law courts in India would apply the law as laid down in the Da'ā'im. From this point of view it is most unfortunate that, except for occasional references in Tyabji's *Principles of Muhammadan Law*²—not to the text of the Da'ā'im, nor to verified translations of extracts, but merely to notes prepared by a learned Ismā'īlī doctor—and a brief manual to which reference will be made later, no part of the *Da'ā'im*³ has ever been edited or translated.⁴ When questions do arise, the Courts take no notice, generally speaking, of this branch of the law and erroneously proceed on the basis that 'Shia' law—a vague and inaccurate term⁴—is applicable. Now this 'Shia' law may, strictly speaking, be Ithnā 'Asharī, Zaidī, Ibādī, or Ismā'īlī, to say the least. Of these distinctions the Courts ordinarily take no notice, and Ithnā 'Asharī principles—this is the 'Shia' or 'Imami' law of the courts in India—are applied as a matter of course to Bohoras. It has been shown that in many cases Ithnā 'Asharī rules differ from those of the Ismā'īlīs, Mut'a and bequests to heirs for instance,⁵ where the Ismā'īlīs agree with the Sunnites rather than with the 'orthodox' Imāmīs. Why this should be so cannot at present be fully explained, but for any proper study of these and allied questions, an accurate edition of the Da'ā'im is of prime necessity.

² 2nd ed., Bombay, 1919, 33 and introduction. This has also been pointed out by me in (1931) 33 Bom. Law Rep., Journal, 31 in discussing Mut'a.

³ The Mustadrak however, as will shortly be seen, cites the Da'ā'im continuously. And two extracts have been published by me: (1) on Bequests to Heirs (1929) JBBRAS, 141; and (2) on Mut'a (1932) JBBRAS, 85.

⁴ Recently Fitzgerald, in his Muhammadan Law (Oxford, 1931), has also repeated this inaccuracy. See Fyzee, Int. Mdn. Law, 30, note 1.

The only attempt made so far to present the Da'ā'im to Indian readers in any shape or form is a small booklet, published both in Urdu and in Arabic, entitled Sharḥu'l-Masā'il,¹ by Mullā Ḥājī Ghulām Ḥusain Ṣāhib. The preface says that since the Da'ā'imu'l-Islām is written in Arabic, and the people in India ('brethren in the faith', viz. the Sulaimānī community, because the author is a Sulaimānī divine) could not avail themselves of the information contained in it, the author first abridged the second volume in Urdu for general use. Certain obsolete matters like slavery, etc. have been omitted. Later, in 1338/1920, it was rendered into Arabic, and submitted to the dā'ī Saiyidnā 'Alī b. Muḥsin² in the Yemen, who permitted its publication. The Urdu version consists of 144 pages; the Arabic is considerably shorter, being only 122 pages. It deals briefly with almost all the usual topics, and has a table of contents and an inheritance chart at the end. Marriage is treated at a proportionately greater length, and many interesting topical observations—not to be found in the original—are made. The chapter on Waṣāyā is very short, only four pages being devoted to it. Apart from its extreme brevity, extraneous matter is also introduced, thus making the manual only an approximation of the original text, and of little use in the courts of law or for detailed study of the contents of the Da'ā'im.

The study of the Da'ā'imu'l-Islām is interesting also from another point of view. Our knowledge of the development of Muslim Law and its legal history is extremely meagre. An early text, written by one who seems to have been a Mālikī at first, and whose legal principles are in some cases in accord with those of the Sunnites, would be of great value. Moreover it may possibly suggest an explanation why and how there is such a wide gulf between the Ḥanafī and the Ithnā ‘Asharī interpretation of law. For although we have some knowledge of Sunnite jurisprudence, Shī‘ite law is on the whole much less known, and any precise information regarding the legal principles of such an interesting sub-school as the Western Ismā‘īlī is very welcome. A manual written by the supreme Qāḍī of al-Mu‘izz and said to be in actual use in Fatimid times, and which to this day applies to this community, should surely be available to us in as original a form as it is possible for us to reconstruct.

² His name is not mentioned in the list of 44 dā'īs given in the Sulaimānī Ṣaḥīfatu's-Ṣalāt (Bombay, no date, circa 1340 A.H.), 549–552. He is the present dā'ī, the 45th.

The style of the work is midway between that of a tradition book, pure and simple, and a work on fiqh. Generally the chapter commences with some verses of the Qur’ān and traditions of the Prophet. Then we have riwāyas handed down from one or more of the first six Imāms,¹ but mostly from Imām Ja‘far aṣ-Ṣādiq. Imām Ja‘far is indeed the fountain-head of Ismā‘īlī Law. The Kitābu’l-Waṣāyā consists of 45 riwāyas; and his authority is invoked no less than 31 times, 3 times in the first part and 28 times (out of 36) in the second. It is to be observed that the author never invokes the authority of later Imāms. This fact has been commented upon by many writers and for the moment at any rate, I have no reasonable explanation to offer.² After the riwāya, which may consist of a story or an answer to a question given by the Imām, explanatory words and arguments are added by the author occasionally. And in some cases it is not easy to decide whether the words form part of the Imām’s answer or the author’s argument. This often happens in the second part of the Kitābu’l-Waṣāyā, which deals almost exclusively with legal matters.

Generally speaking, the language employed is simple and capacity or power of the executor seems to be indicated, and therefore it means executorship. This is the only example of this usage that I have come across so far.

² FI, iv. 355; Rauḍātu’l-Jannāt, 658; Mus. iii. 313. The Shī‘ite writers suggest that he did not report traditions from later Ithnā ‘Asharī Imāms for fear of the Ismā‘īlī divines.

The Author : Qāḍī an-Nu'mān

As a fuller and more complete account of the Qāḍī is shortly to appear in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, London, I shall content myself here with mentioning the salient facts of his life and by giving a complete list of his works.

Ap̄art from the extant works of Qāḍī an-Nu'mān, many of which contain autobiographical material, the most important source of information that we possess is the 'Uyūnu'l-Akhhbār of Saiyidnā 'Imādu'd-dīn Idrīs b. Ḥasan, 19th dā'ir of the Yemen (died, Yemen, 872/1468). The sixth volume of that work contains a full account of the Qāḍī's life and a detailed and descriptive list of his works (folios 33–41).¹ The last portion of the fifth volume also contains much relevant information. The other sources used by me are Ibn Khallikān's Biographical Dictionary,² and Ibn Ḥajar's Raf'u'l-Iṣr.³ The following may also be consulted : R. Gottheil, 'A Distinguished Family of Fatimide Cadis (al-Nu'mān) in the Tenth Century', Journal American Oriental Society, 1907, Vol. 27, 217–297; and W. Ivanow, A Guide to Ismaili Literature (to be published shortly by the Royal Asiatic Society, London), 37–40.

Name. The Qāḍī Abū Ḥanīfa an-Nu'mān b. Abī 'Abdi'l-lāh Muḥammad b. Maṣṣūr b. Aḥmad b. Haiyūn at-Tamīmī (al-Ismā'īlī al-Maghribī).

¹ The references to the fifth and sixth volumes of the 'Uyūn, are to modern copies dated 1351/1932, and consisting of 401 and 320 folios respectively. The complete work is in seven volumes of about three to four hundred folios each and deals with the general history of Ismailism. It is fully and accurately preserved.

³ Kitābu'l-Wulāt of al-Kindī, ed. R. Guest (G.M.S., xix), 586–587.

Pedigree. The following is the genealogical tree of the Nu'mān family of jurists¹:

Birth. The exact date of Nu'mān's birth is not known.²

Death. Old Cairo, Friday, 29 Jumādā ii, 363/27 March, 974 (or according to some the following day).³

Madhhab. The Qāḍī appears to have been derived from a Mālikī stock from Qairawān, adopting the Ismā'ilī faith early in life.

Life. As all the extant works of Qāḍī an-Nu'mān have not yet been studied fully by me, it is not possible to give many details regarding his life. He began by entering the service of Maḥdī, and continued to serve the first four Caliphs, viz. Maḥdī, Qā'im, Maṣṣūr, and Mu'izz. His rank and position went on increasing in the reign of each Caliph-Imām, and he reached the zenith in the time of the Fourth Caliph, Mu'izz. Officially he does not seem to have been appointed Qāḍī'l-Qudāt, but his opinion carried great weight and was, in most instances, the deciding factor. In the Da'wat he is generally held to have attained the rank of ḥujjat.

² Massignon ('Aḥabnāma, 332, No. 16) states that Nu'mān was born in 259 and died in 363 at the age of 104. In this he seems to have followed Gottheil (JAOS, 27, 227). But this opinion is based on insufficient evidence.

³ 'Uyūn, vi. folio 177; Ibn Khallikān, and other sources.

Character. Qāḍī an-Nu'mān was a man of great talent, learning and accomplishments : learned as a scholar, prolific as an author, upright as a judge. Not many external facts of his life are known. Possibly he was a recluse immersed in juristic studies and engaged in the composition of his numerous works. He was the founder, and is rightly regarded as the greatest exponent, of Ismā'īlī jurisprudence. According to the Ismā'īlī tradition he wrote nothing without consulting the Imāms who were his contemporaries, and his great work, Da'ā'imu'l-Islām, is regarded as almost the joint work of Imām Mu'izz and Qāḍī an-Nu'mān, and therefore of the highest authority. It was the official corpus juris after the time of Mu'izz, as a despatch of Ḥākim to the dā'ī of the Yemen clearly shows. Hence Nu'mān is one of the most illustrious of Ismā'īlī authors.

Works.

Preserved (by Western Ismā'īlīs)	..	18

TOTAL	..	44

Of these 42 are mentioned in the 'Uyūn, vi and 2 (Nos. 14 and 44) in the Fihristu'l-Majdū', an Ismā'īlī bibliography. Ibn Khallikān only mentions 6 (Nos. 3, 5, 6, 8, 18, and 37) of his works, and in most instances the names given by him are incorrect. The works partially preserved are Nos. 4, 17, 21, and 22. It is most unfortunate for Ismailism and Ismailitic studies that more than half of his works have been lost during the last five centuries, since the days of Saiyidnā Idrīs b. Ḥasan.

Of the Qāḍī's works, only 5 are known to be preserved in European libraries; the rest are quite unknown. An incomplete copy of the Sharḥu'l-Akḥbār (No. 33) exists in the Staatsbibliothek, Berlin. Parts 13 and 14 of this work, and three others, viz. Da'ā'imu'l-Islām, I (No. 9), Asāsu't-Ta'wīl (No. 21), and al-Majālis wa'l-Musāyarāt (No. 40) have recently been acquired by the School of Oriental Studies, London.¹

II. THE SOURCES OF THE TEXT

The text of the Kitābu'l-Waṣāyā from the second volume of Da'ā'imu'l-Islām is based on four manuscripts designated

p. 15, lines 4-5.

For and D is in a Sulaimānī collection
read and C is in a Sulaimānī collection

A, B, C, and D, and one printed source, Mustadraku'l-Wasā'il, a well-known Ithnā 'Asharī corpus of traditions. None of the MSS. is ancient. Portions of C seem to be the oldest; D is dated 1126/1714. A, B, and D are in my possession, and D is in a Sulaimānī collection.

(1) MS. A (Dated 1312/1895.)

Da'ā'imu'l-Islām, Volume II, 288 folios; 17 lines. Outside: 6 by 9 by 1½ inches. Lines: 3½ by 6 inches. Clear Indian Naskh. Not vocalized. Thin English hand-made paper, bound in native maroon leather. The book is full of marginal notes and corrections. Each riwāya begins in red ink, and the chapter headings are invariably in red ink. The first 31 pages are numbered, thereafter neither the folios nor the pages are indicated.

Begins :

قال الله عز وجل يآءيها (sic) الذين آمنوا اذا نودى للصلاة
من يوم الجمعة فاسعوا الى ذكر الله و ذرو البيع الى قوله وابتغوا من
فضل الله و اذكروا الله كثيراً لعلمكم تغفلون¹ الخ ،

The volume ends with :

(2) MS. B (Dated 1325/1907.)

370 folios. Outside: $8\frac{1}{2}$ by $11\frac{1}{2}$ by $1\frac{1}{2}$ inches. Lines: on p. 1, 12 lines; p. 2, 16 lines; pp. 3-17, 17 lines; pp. 18-end, 12 lines to the page. Inside: 4 by 7 inches. Modern, ugly Naskh, unformed. Thin European paper of poor quality. Bound in full native brown calf. Slightly worm-eaten. Not vocalized. Many diacritical points missing.

Begins as A, but there is no title; and in its stead a blank space of about 2 inches is left. The margins are wide, and on the first page, in the margin, there are a few lines of the Kiābu'l-Yanbū', 15 lines in red ink and 12 in black. This note begins:

كتاب البيوع، قال الله تعالى يا ايها الذين آمنوا لا تاكلوا الربوا النح،

Then we have باب ما يجوز من البيوع وما لا يجوز and after a few lines the scribe stops.

Each riwāya is not marked in red ink as is usual in the MSS. of the Da'a'im, but there always is an indication in the margin by the words وعن. The chapter headings are invariably in red ink.

Ends:

(3) MS. C (Undated. In part circa 300 years old.)

223 folios. Outside: 6 by 9 by 1½ inches. 17 to 19 lines. Well-formed Arabian and Indian Naskh. Partially vocalized and fully punctuated by inverted commas in red ink. Paper of local manufacture. Badly worm-eaten. Numerous marginal corrections. Full brown leather. A very accurate copy of the text.

This MS. consists of three different parts.

- i. The most modern. Folio 1 (one page). (Indian Naskh.)
- ii. Intermediate. Ff. 2-4 ; 22-25 ; 169-187 ; and 190-223. (Indian Naskh.)
- iii. The oldest. Ff. 5-21 ; 23-24 ; 26-168 ; and 188-189. (Arabian Naskh.)

A fine Yemenite Sulaimānī MS. The oldest portion, in which the Kitābu'l-Waṣāyā is contained, is the best MS. available to me. It seems to be about 300 years old. Neither the name of the scribe, nor the date is mentioned. The MS. has been repaired at least three times.

Begins and ends as usual.

³ Sic. Not Hamdānī.

(4) MS. D (Dated 1126/1714.)

293 folios. Outside : 7 by 10 by 2 inches. Line 4 inches. The lines to the page differ ; folios 1-3 are modern and contain about 17 lines ; folios 4-11, 19 lines ; folios 12 onwards, 16 to 18 lines.

Legible Indian Naskh. Partially vocalized. The paper is damaged by water and is in a very bad condition. Badly worm-eaten, repaired carefully recently, and bound in full blue buckram. Wide margins, full of corrections and scholia. Originally not a very accurate MS., its value lies in the numerous corrections which have been made by successive readers.

Begins as usual. Ends :

(5) Mustadraku'l-Wasā'il.

Mustadraku'l-Wasā'il wa Mustanbatu'l-Masā'il. By Mirzā Husain b. Muḥammad at-Taḳī an-Nūrī at-Ṭabarsī. Three volumes, lith. in Tehran. Vol. i, 1318/1900 ; Vol. ii, 1319/1901 ; Vol. iii, 1321/1903. Pages 602, 646, and 878 respectively.

This is a well-known Shī'ite collection of traditions and supplements the Wasā'ilu'sh-Shī'a (3 vols., Tehran, 1323/1905. Repeatedly printed in Persia), by Muḥammad b. Ḥasan al-Ḥurr al-Āmili, which is a collection, according to subjects, of all the traditions to be found in the canonical 'Four Books'.¹ The author of the Mustadrak states that he desired to collect all the traditions which the author of the Wasā'il had omitted. See his introduction and iii. 289. The author, according to his own note (iii. 877), was born on 18 Shawwāl, 1254=5 January, 1839. The first book in volume i, Kitābu't-Tahāra, was finished in 1296/1879 ; from the last lines of the third volume it appears that the book was finished in 1319/1901. The date of the death of the author does not appear, the book seems to have been published in his lifetime.²

The author of the Mustadrak cites the Da'ā'im fully and accurately, not in the sequence in which the traditions are to be found in the Da'ā'im, but according to his own division of the subject. The three volumes of the Mustadrak comprise the usual subjects and are divided into various kitābs. These kitābs are again divided into bābs, and in these bābs the traditions are numbered, and the authority for each tradition is given by mentioning the name of the book in every case. Kitābu'l-Waṣāyā is to be found in the second volume, pages 517-529. Total of bābs, 1363 ; and traditions, 4830.³

² An account of the Mustadrak has been given by me in discussing Mu'a in Ismā'ili Law (1932) JBRAS, 85.

³ Mus. iii. Contents, p. 25.

The third volume from page 290 to the end, contains 12 appendixes (fawā'id), the first dealing with the books cited, the second with the authors of these books ; then follow accounts of the four books, and their authors and so on. The second appendix contains a long and valuable discussion of Qāḍī an-Nu'mān's life and work (iii. 313).

Thus the Mustadrak is of great value for the establishment of the text of the Da'ā'im.

None of the MSS. at my disposal is ancient and therefore no finality can be claimed for the purity of the text of any of them. A, B, C, and D merely indicate the sequence of time in which I came to have the opportunity to examine them. First, I obtained A after long delay and vexation, and began copying out the text from it. The folios marked in the text of the Kitābu'l-Waṣāyā printed below are according to the numbering in A. A is a fairly good MS., but contains many copyist's slips and omissions. After a longish interval I got B, but on collation I found that this was a distinctly worse MS., and, except occasionally, threw very little light on real difficulties. The copyist of B obviously cares little for such trifles as grammar. The MS. which above all others was most helpful was C. The original parts, although badly worm-eaten, are the most ancient of all the MSS. at my disposal. It is written by a scholar and carefully corrected ; it is fully punctuated and partially vocalized. An inverted comma in red ink marks the end of a sentence, and for many a difficult or doubtful passage, the vocalization lightens the editor's task. I am only sorry I could not obtain the MS. from the beginning in order to base the text principally on it. Still in almost all cases of real difficulty I have preferred the readings in C. D came to my hands very late, and collating it with the text already prepared, I found a few interesting marginal glosses and occasional useful readings. The MS. on the whole is inaccurate ; but on account of its comparative age and numerous corrections, it possesses a certain value.

is on the whole remarkably uniform. The book seems to have been preserved with singular care for the last three hundred years or so in India, and there are no material variations in the text. All the four MSS. except C, are of Indian origin, and it is almost certain that they represent an original that came to India fairly early. The earliest MS. of the second volume of the Da'ā'imu'l-Islām that I have seen is dated about the middle of the 9th century A.H. (middle of the 15th century A.D.). Unfortunately it has been impossible to collate the text given below with it, but I have read some passages from the Kitābu'l-Waṣāyā in it and found that the text does not differ materially.

The Mustadrak, in which riwāyas from the Da'ā'im are often cited, also gives almost word for word the same version. I have been unable to trace some riwāyas in it, for instance, the waṣīyas in Part A below ; but wherever there is a citation, it is abundantly clear that the original before the author was almost exactly the same that we possess. This fact is interesting, for it shows that for at least some 300 years, both in India and in Persia, and also in the Yemen, if C is accepted as a Yemenite MS., the traditional text of the work is the same. This text of the Kitābu'l-Waṣāyā is now before us, and it represents the current tradition in which it is handed down by students and teachers for purposes of religious instruction. It is seldom referred to in the law courts. How far it differs from what Qāḍi an-Nu'mān wrote in the early part of the fourth century of the Hijra, some six centuries before the earliest MS. examined by me, it is impossible to say at present.

Very few catalogues are available to me in Bombay, but from the investigations made by me and from the kind answers of some European scholars, such as my teacher Professor Nicholson of Cambridge, it seems that there is no known copy of the Da'ā'im in any European library.¹ If any scholar could kindly enlighten me on this subject I shall be very grateful. I feel certain, however, that in the Yemen, the stronghold of the Western Ismā'īlis, some very ancient MSS. must exist. Similarly, it seems not improbable that in Egypt and Syria some MSS. may exist unknown to the generality of scholars. But at any rate in India, the Western Ismā'īlis preserve the text with singular accuracy, venerate it greatly, study it assiduously, and hide it zealously from the profane gaze of those who are outside the pale of the Holy Da'wat. Why the book is kept so secret, one does not know, for it does not contain, to the uninitiated and the unilluminated eye at any rate, the principles of Ḥaqā'iq,¹ the esoteric Neo-Platonic philosophy developed by the Western Ismā'īlis, and which is their special pride and distinction.²

As regards the text, an attempt has been made to give all the variant readings in the MSS. and the Mustadrak, however useless or unimportant they may seem. Even copyists' errors are generally recorded. This has been done with the set purpose of demonstrating how little the five sources differ among themselves. To this rule there is only one exception. Variations in pious phrases are not recorded; usually those in A are kept: and where it omits them, I have joyfully refrained from adding any surplusage. The text is partially vocalized, and an honest attempt has been made to give the i'rāb in all cases where there is the slightest possibility of doubt or difficulty; so that at least one reasonable reading is presented to the reader. I have not however been very consistent in the vocalization. Occasionally, in addition to keeping in view the principle just mentioned, I have also inserted the short vowels wherever any of the MSS.—and particularly C and D—have inserted them.

² Few European scholars have been able to study this science in detail. Apart from such articles in EI, as Bāṭiniya, Ismā'īliya, Ikhwānu's-Ṣafā', Ḳarmaṭiya, etc.; see Ivanow, Ismailitica (Calcutta, 1922), and his recent paper on 'An Ismailitic work by Naṣīru'd-dīn Ṭūsī', JRAS for July, 1931, 527-564; but above all, his recent Guide to Ismaili Literature (R.A.S., London, 1933).

In translating the Arabic into English, I have attempted, albeit despairingly, to follow the method and principles of my revered teacher and friend, Professor R. A. Nicholson of Cambridge, whose rendering of the Mathnawī of Jalālu'd-dīn Rūmī is a monument of learning and insight, and shows how accuracy can be combined with a sense of style. The difficulty of the task has not been underestimated ; and no effort has been spared for achieving the dual object of faithfulness to the Arabic original and simplicity of diction in the English version.

III. SUMMARY OF THE LAW OF WILLS

The Kitābu'l-Waṣāyā consists of two parts : the first part, dealing with the injunction to make wills, contains religious and theological matter. It is the second part, §§10–44, dealing with valid and invalid wills, to which we must direct our attention in order to discover the law of wills and bequests according to the legal system of the Western Ismā'ilīs. Although it contains five times as many riwāyas, this part is only about one-half the length of the first. We must now briefly state the legal propositions to be found in the Book of Wills.

In reading what follows, two facts must be carefully borne in mind. Firstly, the Da'ā'im, despite the fact that it is the first authority in legal questions among Western Ismā'ilīs, is not exhaustive of the rules of fiqh : other works, legal as well as religious, some of which have been mentioned earlier (p. 2), supplement it in many details. Secondly, the summary given below is not a complete statement of all the legal propositions that are contained in, and which may be deduced from, the text of Kitābu'l-Waṣāyā ; it professes to be no more than a résumé or summary for general purposes.

Introductory. The Qur'ān lays down : It is prescribed for you that when one of you is face to face with death, if he leave any goods, the legacy is to his parents, and to his kinsmen, in reason ; and that, as far as possible, wills must be made in the presence of witnesses.¹ The making of wills is strongly recommended (§§ 2–4), but it is not compulsory : a man who dies without making a waṣīya (will) is declared by the Prophet to be wanting in his consideration for others, and in his wisdom (§ 5), but apparently he is free from sin. The testaments of the Prophet (§§ 5 and 7) and of 'Alī I (§ 9) are cited as examples to be followed, and contain religious and moral injunctions in addition to dispositions of property. The waṣīya of 'Alī I in § 9 is most interesting from the purely Ismailitic point of view.

1. Form of Wasiya. A waṣīya (will) need not be in writing and witnesses are not absolutely necessary. The Prophet's waṣīya in § 5 was oral, and there was no formal attestation. And 'Alī's will in § 9 was first made orally and then, to avoid misunderstanding with regard to its contents, reduced to writing. Even words are not absolutely essential : a person who has lost the power of speech may bequeath by means of gestures (§§ 35, 36).

2. Extent of Testamentary Capacity. A man cannot bequeath more than a third of his property (§§ 11, 14), without the consent of his heirs (§ 13) ; and such consent may be given either in the lifetime of the testator² or afterwards. A woman, it is distinctly laid down, has the same right of bequest as a man (§ 11a). And it is better, more commendable, not to bequeath to the full extent of the one-third (§§ 11–13) ; thus leaving more property for the legal heirs. Legacies to non-Muslims are permissible, provided they are lawful in all other respects (§ 27). It is stated that legacies for manumitting slaves (§ 15) and for enabling pilgrimages to be performed (§ 16) must be given preference over the other legacies. Such legacies are highly commendable (§ 29). A man may revoke or alter his will at any time (§ 26). Where a man commits an act with the intention of causing his own death, and thereafter dies, a will made by him after the commission of the said act, is not valid in law (§ 39).

¹ The first verse cited in § 1 (2, 176), has been the cause of numerous controversies among commentators and doctors of the law, and its meaning is very obscure. See for instance §§ 19–21 and footnotes to them. The second verse is 5, 105.

3. Bequests to Heirs. Bequests to heirs do not take effect, except with the consent of all the other heirs (§§ 19–21).¹ Such consent may be obtained in the lifetime of the testator, and once it is given, it cannot be revoked after his death. For instance, where a man bequeaths to a greater extent than allowed by law—that is, more than a third of his estate and/or to his heirs—and the heirs agree to this course in the testator's lifetime, they are not entitled, after his death, to reopen the question and go back upon the arrangement (§ 34).² A gift to an heir made in *Marḍu'l-maut*³ is declared to be invalid (§ 21).

4. Absent Heirs. Where a testator dies leaving heirs who are absent, the executor shall refer the matter to the qāḍī, and the qāḍī must protect the shares of the absent heirs by the appointment of agents (or receivers). The executor cannot retain possession of the property of the heirs without the order of the qāḍī (§ 44).

5. Marḍu'l-maut (Death-illness). Marḍu'l-maut is mentioned only twice, and that too, incidentally. It is stated, firstly, that a donor cannot, during death-illness, make a gift (hiba or ʿafīya) to an heir (§ 21). But it is to be observed that nothing is mentioned about gifts in Marḍu'l-maut made to persons other than heirs. Secondly, it is laid down, that debts acknowledged in death-illness must be paid in full (see Debts, below).

² This is in accord, curiously enough, not with Sunnite, but with Ithnā ʿAsharī Law. Wilson, Anglo-Mdn. Law, 6th ed., §§ 270 and 476; Fitzgerald, Mdn. Law, 168–169.

6. Debts. Debts must be paid out of the deceased's property before legacies (§ 23); and a man during death-illness may acknowledge his indebtedness to any person, and if this is a bona fide admission, the debt must be paid fully (§ 22). Unpaid dower is considered a debt; and ranking with other debts, it abates rateably if the assets are not sufficient to pay off all the debts (§ 24).

7. •Legatees. In order to complete the bequest, a legatee must accept the legacy; and a legatee has the option to refuse a legacy (§ 30). If the legatee dies before the testator, the legacy is void, and reverts to the estate of the testator. If however the legatee dies after the testator, and after having accepted the legacy, the legacy goes to his own heirs. But if, on the other hand, the legatee dies without having accepted the legacy, here also the legacy reverts to the estate of the testator and shall be divided among his heirs according to the rules of Inheritance and Succession (§ 25).

8. Executors (awṣiyā', sing. waṣī). Executors must strictly follow the wishes of the testator: they must not, for instance, utilize the money bequeathed for the manumission of slaves where the performance of pilgrimage is what the testator desired (§ 28). Where a testator dies indebted, the executor is not entitled in administering the estate, to take possession of the moneys due to the creditors of the deceased, without their express consent (§ 38). Nothing save dishonesty, loss of reason, apostasy, 'prodigality'¹ and 'abandoning the sunna' can deprive an executor of his executorship (§ 41). And 'the Sultan is the executor of him who has no executor, and the guardian of him who has no guardian' (§ 41). In other words, in cases where the right of appointing a waṣī has not been exercised by a deceased person, the state must guard the interests of his creditors, legatees and heirs.

An executor is not entitled to carry on trade with the property of the testator's infant children, unless expressly authorized to do so (§ 42). If an executor carries on trade without such express authorization and loss occurs, the executor has to bear it; if, on the other hand, profit accrues, the minor children are entitled to it. Where however the testator expressly allows the executor to share profits, the executor is entitled to his share of the profits (§§ 42, 43). c.

9. Slaves. The manumission of slaves is commendable (§ 29). Slaves are not entitled to legacies (§ 33), except under certain specified circumstances (§§ 31, 37). Slaves may be manumitted by instalments (§ 32).

10. Inheritance and Maintenance. Where a man sends maintenance moneys to his family and thereafter dies, the residue, left over after paying for such maintenance till the day of his death, is available for payment of legacies, and for distribution amongst his heirs (§ 40).

11. Rule of Construction. The term juz', in law, means 'the tenth part, and the term sahm, the sixth part of the testator's property (§§ 17-18).¹

Note.—I should like here to express my gratitude to two Shaikhs in particular who were good enough to help me in the preparation of the text. Shaikh Hibatu'l-lāh ibn Shaikh Shamsu'd-dīn (of Bombay) read the MS. and made numerous corrections and suggestions, and explained several difficult passages to me. Shaikh Ismā'il Bhaisaheb ibn Shaikh Luqmānjī (of Burhānpūr, C.P.) read a proof and corrected it after comparing it with an old and accurate copy of the Da'ā'im. To both these courteous scholars my sincerest gratitude is due. The accuracy of the text, such as it is, is due largely to their learning and exertions; the responsibility for the errors and imperfections is entirely mine.

The Book of Wills

(A) CONCERNING THE INJUNCTION TO MAKE WILLS AND WHAT MAY BE BEQUEATHED

§ 1. [f. 174 b₈] Says God, exalted is He, *It is prescribed for you that when one of you is face to face with death, if he leave (any) goods, the legacy is to his parents, and to his kinsmen in reason. A duty this upon all that fear.*¹ And He says, mighty and great is He, *O ye who believe ! let there be a testimony between you when any one of you is on the point of death—at the time he makes his will—two equitable persons from amongst you ; or two others from some other folk.*² §§ 1-4

§ 2. And it is related to us³ from Ja'far b. Muḥammad, on whom be peace, from his father, from his ancestors, from 'Alī, that the Prophet, the blessings of God be upon him and his progeny, said : ' It does not befit a Muslim to pass two nights without having a written testament under his head.'

§ 3. And (it is related) from Abū Ja'far Muḥammad (al-Bāqir) b. 'Alī that he said : ' Bequest is incumbent on every Muslim.'

§ 4. And from Ja'far b. Muḥammad, on whom be peace, who was told : ' When your slave A'yan (b. Sansan)⁴ was about

³ Usually vocalized ruwīnā, but some shaikhs prefer to read rawaynā, we relate' referring to Mu'izz and Nu'mān.

§§ 4-5 [175 a] to die, the pangs of death were very painful to him. Then he improved so that we thought he had recovered. Yet later on he died.' He (Ja'far) said: 'This is the restfulness which precedes death. For verily, not a single person dies but God returns to him his reason, and his powers of hearing and sight; and He causes him to remember the number of his belongings which are either disposed of or inherited, in order to enable him to make his testament.'

§ 5. And from the Prophet, on whom be peace, who said: 'He who does not make his will in the proper manner at the time of his death, will be considered to be faulty in respect of his consideration¹ (for others) and his wisdom.' They said: 'O Prophet, and how should a dying man make his testament?' He said: 'When death draws nigh to him and people forgather, he should say. "O my God, Creator of the Heavens and the Earth, Knower of that which is concealed and that which is manifest; the Compassionate, the Merciful! Verily I have sworn allegiance to Thee in this world; verily I bear witness that there is no deity other than Thee—unique art Thou and there is no associate with Thee—and that Muḥammad is Thy slave and Messenger. And (I bear witness) that the Garden (Paradise), and the Fire (Hell), and the Return (Resurrection), and the Reckoning, and Predestination and the Balance are all true. And that religion is as Thou hast described; and Islām as Thou hast laid down; and the Word, as Thou hast uttered; and the Qur'ān, as Thou hast revealed. And that Thou art the Lord, real and manifest. May God requite Muḥammad on our behalf with the best of requitals, and may He greet him with greetings of peace. O my God, my Refuge² in times of anxiety, and my Companion in times of distress, and my Guardian in times of ease; my Lord and the Lord of my ancestors, do not entrust me to myself even for the twinkling of an eye, for if Thou dost so [175 b],

² Lit., 'provision'.

I shall draw nigh to Evil and recede from Goodness. And be friendly to me in the loneliness of my grave, and consider me as one within Thy covenant on the day I meet Thee." Then he may bequeath according to his need.' This then is the covenant of the dying. And bequest is incumbent on every Muslim.

§ 6. And 'Ali said : ' The Prophet taught me this testament, saying that Gabriel had taught it to him.'

§ 7. And from 'Ali who said : ' He who feels that the time of his death has come, should renew his covenant and his testament.' He was asked, ' And how should a testament be made, O Prince of Believers ? ' He said : ' (You should begin by) saying : " In the name of God, the Merciful, the Compassionate. This is a testimony from God,¹ to which fact X, the son of Y, bears witness. *God bears witness that there is no deity other than Him, and so do the angels and the possessors of knowledge. The Maintainer of justice, there is no deity other than Him, the Mighty, the Wise.*² O my Lord, he who comes from Thee, and is going towards Thee, and who is within Thy possession and power, for him Thy hands are far-reaching. Thou providest as Thou wishest, and Thou art the Gentle and the Knowing One.

" In the name of God, the Merciful, the Compassionate. This is the testament of X, the son of Y. He bears witness that there is no deity other than Him, unique is He and without associate ; and that Muḥammad is His slave and Messenger.

It is also possible to read أَشْهَدُ شهادةً ' I bring a testimony from God '

² 3, 16. The commentators are not agreed as to the construction of qā'imān bi'l-ḡist. I have therefore given my own rendering, adopting the construction of Baidāwī, Muḥammad Ali and Pickthall, and dissenting from Rodwell and Palmer. Palmer renders it as follows :

' God bears witness that there is no god but He, and the angels, and those possessed of knowledge standing up for justice. There is no God but He, the mighty, the wise.'

§§ 7-8

He (God) sent him to teach righteousness and the true faith, and to warn him who is living ; but the sentence is due against the unbelievers.¹ O my Lord, I call Thee to bear witness,—and Thou art sufficient as a witness—and those who carry Thy throne, and those who reside in Thy heavens and in Thy earth, and those whom Thou hast sown, and created out of nothing, and re-shaped, and caused to flow,—that Thou art Allāh, there is no deity other than Thou, unique art Thou and without associate, [176 a] and that Muḥammad is Thy slave and Messenger ; and that the Hour² is doubtless to come ; and that God will resurrect those who are in the graves ; and the Garden and the Fire are realities. I utter these words of mine with him who utters them with me, and I utter them instead of him who denies. There is neither power nor strength save in Ġod, the Exalted, the Mighty. O my God, write my testimony with the testimony of him who bears witness to what I have borne witness ; and as for him who refuses,—write my testimony in the place of his ; and allow me to enter Thy covenant with it—a covenant which thou wilt fulfil with me on the day I meet Thee alone. Verily Thou shouldst not break Thy promise.”³ Then he should lay himself down in the direction of the Qibla saying, “ (I am) a follower of the religion of the Prophet, being a righteous man and a Muslim and I am not one of the polytheists ”. And then he should make his testament as the Prophet commanded.’

§ 8. And from Ja‘far b. Muḥammad, he said that the testament of the Prophet to ‘Alī contained the following : ‘ O ‘Alī, I commend to you certain virtues for your own sake, which you must always remember.’ Then he (the Prophet) said : ‘ O my God, help him. Firstly, truth,—never utter a falsehood from your mouth. Secondly, piety,—never venture upon dishonesty. Thirdly, Fear of God,—(fear Him) as if He were ever present in your sight. Fourthly, excessive weeping in (the fear of) God,—it will build for you, with every tear, a thousand mansions in Paradise. Fifthly, expend your wealth and sacrifice your blood for your faith. Sixthly, adherence to my practice in prayer, fasting and charity. [176 b] As for prayer, (pray) 51 rak'as each day. As for fasting, 30 days¹ (are prescribed for you); and in each month, Thursday in its earlier, Wednesday in its middle, and Wednesday in its final, part. And as for charity, endeavour to such an extent, that it may be said that you are extravagant. But do not be wasteful. And pray by night, pray by night, pray by night.² And I enjoin you to pray at the time of zawāl,³ at the time of zawāl, at the time of zawāl. And recite the Qur'ān, recite the Qur'ān under all circumstances. And raise your hands in prayer,⁴ and use a tooth-stick⁵ at the time of each ablution (wuḍū'). As for virtuous qualities, hold fast to them⁶; and as for evil characteristics, avoid them. And if you do not act in this manner, do not blame any one except your own self.'

§ 9. And from 'Alī (Zainu'l-'Ābidīn) b. Ḥusain and Muḥammad (al-Bāqir) b. 'Alī, on whom both be the blessings of God, that they related the testament of 'Alī (b. Abī Ṭālib), the blessings of God upon him. They said: 'He made the testament in favour of his son, al-Ḥasan, while his sons Ḥusain and Muḥammad (ibn al-Ḥanafiya), and all his children, and the leaders of his party, and the people of his house bore witness. Then he handed over to him (Ḥasan) the books and weapons, and said: "The Prophet ordered me that I should give my dying injunctions to you and deliver to you my books

¹ This refers to the month of Ramadān. The other fasts are merely recommended, but are not obligatory.

² This threefold injunction is for emphasis.

³ Zawāl is the inclination of the sun after reaching the highest point at midday: hence afternoon. The zawāl prayers are Zuhr and Aḡr.

And he charged me to command you to deliver them over to your brother Ḥusain, when you are face to face with death." [177 a] Then he turned to Ḥusain and said : "The Prophet has ordered you to deliver (them likewise) to this son of yours." He then caught hold of his (Ḥusain's) son, 'Alī b. al-Ḥusain, by the arm and embraced him and said to him : "O my little son, the Prophet has commanded you to deliver them to your son, Muḥammad ; and transmit to him the Prophet's and my salutations." Then he ('Alī b. Abi Ṭālib) turned to his son Ḥasan and said : "O my son, you are the guardian of the divine command and the guardian of the blood.¹ If you forgive, it is on you that the decision rests ; but if you wish to avenge,² then return blow for blow and no guilt will lie on you."³ And before this he had specially selected Ḥasan and Ḥusain for giving the secret injunctions in which he had written for them the names of the kings, and the period of the existence of this world, and the names of the dā'īs to the day of resurrection. And he had handed over to them the book⁴ of the Qur'ān and the Book of Knowledge.⁵

⁴ Means the written copy of the Qur'ān (lit. 'recitation'). The importance of these lines lies in the fact that some Ismā'ilis assert that they have the true text of the Qur'ān. Not that the textus receptus is false ; but they say it omits certain references to 'Alī. For a similar Shi'ite theory see Mirza Kazembeg's art. in JA for 1843, 378 et seq.

And when the people gathered round, 'Ali said to them (Ḥasan § 9 (contd.) and Ḥusain) what he said. Then he ('Ali) wrote a written testament, and it was this :

“In the name of God, the Merciful, the Compassionate. This is the testament of 'Abdu'l-lāh 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib made in his last moments in this world. And he is about to travel¹ towards the 'half-way house of the dead',² and on a journey away from relations and friends. He bears witness that there is no deity other than God, unique is He and without associate, and that Muḥammad is His slave and His Messenger and His trusted³ one, the blessings of God on him and on his brother apostles and on his excellent progeny. And may God, on our behalf, [177 b] requite Muḥammad with the most excellent of such requitals as may be made to a prophet by his community. And I enjoin you, O Ḥasan, and all who are in my presence from amongst the People of my House, and my children and my partisans, to fear God, and *do not die until you embrace Islām. And hold firmly the rope of God and do not divide yourselves into sects.*³ For verily I have heard the Prophet saying that 'the composing of differences and the strengthening of the bonds of friendship among men is better than all fasts and prayers'. And I enjoin you to act before your speech is taken away from you (at the point of death), and I enjoin you to consider health as a great opportunity before disease overtakes you, and *Lest a soul should say : Oh woe to me ! for what I neglected towards God ! for, verily, I was amongst those who did jest ! or lest it should say, if God had but guided me, I should surely have been of those who fear.*⁴ How can this be now ?⁵ And you

Did it (the sinner's sight) not show him the harm before this time, and before the curtain was dropped on penitence by the descent of calamity?⁴ And the soul desires that if it could return, it would act in the fear of God; but these wishes are of no avail. And I enjoin you to avoid passion, for verily passion leads to blindness, and blindness, to your doom both in this world and in the next. And I request you to be sincere in your devotion to God, great and mighty is He; and why should you not be sincerely devoted to One who removed you from amongst the polytheists,⁵ and rescued you from the persistent denial of the agnostics? So worship Him out of your own free will and also out of fear. And this will not be [178 a] futile in His eyes. And I enjoin you to be sincerely devoted to the righteous guide and Messenger, Muḥammad; and one of the ways in which you can show your devotion to him is that you should return to him his dues. Says God, *Say, 'I do not ask for it a hire—only the love of my kinsfolk.'*⁶ And a man who repays to Muḥammad his dues by showing affection towards his (the Prophet's) relations, he verily has returned what was entrusted to him.⁷ And he who does not return it (the amāna or thing entrusted), becomes his (the Prophet's) adversary, and he who becomes the Prophet's adver-

I enjoin you to love the companions of the Prophet who were not innovators (in religious matters), and did not shelter an innovator, and did not deny the truth. For verily the Prophet left them to our care, and cursed the innovators amongst them and amongst others. I enjoin you to be clean ritually,⁴ without which prayer⁵ cannot be complete ; and to pray, for prayer is the prop of faith and the mainstay of Islām—so neglect it not. (I enjoin you to give) zakāt which perfects prayer, and to observe the fast in the month of Ramaḍān ; and a *pilgrimage unto the House (Ka'ba) for whosoever can find his way there.*⁶ And I enjoin you to fight in the way of God, for verily it is the best of actions,⁷ and the strength of faith and of Islām. And he will be unable to drink from his pond, nor will he obtain the Prophet's intercession, by God—never. Nor he who is accustomed to drink any of the intoxicating drinks. Nor he who commits adultery with a married woman, by God—never. Nor he who did not recognize my right, nor the right of the People of my House, to which they were most entitled, by God—never. And one who has followed his passions, or whose stomach is full while his neighbour—a believer—is hungry, will not be able to enter into the Prophet's presence. And no one who does not adhere to justice for the sake of God, will be able to enter into the Prophet's presence. Verily the Prophet charged me and said: 'O 'Alī, bid what is reasonable and forbid what is wrong,³ by your own hand. And if you cannot do so,

Beware of trusting women, for it was they who caused your father (Adam) to depart from Paradise, and rendered him up to the affliction of this world. And I enjoin you to obey him whose disobedience will not be excused in you.⁵ I enjoin you to be devoted to us, the People of the House, for God has coupled obedience to us with obedience to Him and His Messenger. And He has laid this down⁶ in a verse of His Book as a favour. This is a duty laid down by God on us and on you, which makes obedience obligatory to Him and to His Messenger, and to those from among the People of the House of His Messenger, who are possessed of authority. (B) CONCERNING LAWFUL AND UNLAWFUL WILLS¹

§ 10. It is related to us from Ja'far b. Muḥammad, on §§ 10-13 whom be peace, from his father, from his ancestors, from 'Alī, the blessings of God be on him, that he ('Alī) came across a poor man. The man said to him : ' Shall I not make a will, O Prince of Believers ? ' He said : ' Admonish (thy heirs) to piety towards God. As for thy property, leave it to thy heirs ; for verily it is something trivial and unimportant, and verily God has said, . . . if he leave (any) goods ² ; while you do not leave any goods which you can bequeath.'

§ 11. And from the Prophet that he said : ' A man has the best right (to dispose of) his third ; he may deal with it as he likes.' 'Alī told a man that he may bequeath a third of his property ; and a third is a great deal.

§ 11a. Ja'far b. Muḥammad said that a woman had similar rights.

§ 12. And from 'Alī, that he said : ' I prefer that bequest should be decreased to the fifth ; ' and he said : ' God, mighty and great is He, is well-pleased with the fifth³ from His own slaves.' And that ' (bequest of) the fifth is the course of moderation ; and of the third, a hardship on the heirs : and it is more pleasing to me that the fourth should be bequeathed rather than the third (of the property) '.

§ 13. And Ja'far b. Muḥammad said : ' He who [182 a] bequeaths the third has not left anything for his heirs, and has acted harmfully towards them. Bequest of the fourth or the fifth (part of the estate) is more excellent than that of the third.' And this is the preference concerning which we related (a saying) from him,⁴ and bequest to the extent of the third is permissible. If the inheritance is considerable and the

§§ 13-16 heirs rich, then there is no harm in dealing with the whole of the third. But if they are indigent, then to decrease it as has been related above,¹ is more excellent. And bequest to a greater extent than the third is not permissible, except when it is allowed by the heirs. And it is possible for them (all the heirs together) to permit this,² or for any one from amongst them to allow this (the excess) from his own share.³

§ 14. And it is related to us from Ja'far b. Muḥammad, that he said : ' If a man bequeaths more than the third, or the whole of his property, this is not permissible. And (the excess over the third) returns to that which is suitable, rather than to that which is not.⁴ For surely in the case of one who has wronged himself in the matter of bequest and gone astray in it, the bequest will return to that which is proper and the heirs will receive their proper shares of the inheritance.'

§ 15. And from Muḥammad al-Bāqir and Ja'far as-Ṣādiq, may the blessings of God be upon them, that they said : ' When a man makes certain bequests, in which manumission is mentioned, then (the price of such) manumission should first be taken out of his third, and the residue (if any) should be allocated to the remaining bequests.'⁵

§ 16. Ja'far b. Muḥammad said : ' And similarly if a bequest is made so that from it a pilgrimage be paid for, the testator never having performed the pilgrimage himself, [in this case] this bequest shall be given preference to all the others.'

¹ Lit. ' then the decrease to that which is less than it (the third) as related above is, preferable '.

² That is, bequest of more than the third.

³ Even if other heirs do not allow the bequest, one particular heir has the right to forgo his share in order to validate the bequest or will.

⁴ Or, returns and is divided in the approved or proper manner, and this illegal legacy is not approved and therefore not allowed.

⁵ Preference is hereby given to bequests containing directions for emancipating slaves : other bequests are to rank pari passu only afterwards. Hence if the price of the manumitted slaves exhausts the third, then the other bequests would not take effect.

§ 17. And from Ja'far b. Muḥammad, the blessings of God §§ 17-18 be upon him, that a man amongst his companions told him: 'A woman among us disposed of her third by will and said, "Let there be given from it (the bequeathable third) a part (juz') [182 b] to such and such a man, another to such and such a man, and another to such and such a woman." And verily Ibn Abī Lailā held this to be unlawful when the case was brought before him and said: "She only mentioned a thing which she did not specify."' Then Abū 'Abdī'l-lāh Ja'far b. Muḥammad said: 'Ibn Abī Lailā did not know the correct rule (of law). A juz' is one part out of ten.' By this he (Ja'far), may the blessings of God be upon him, meant that the *ajzā'*¹ consist of ten portions.² Now what is more³ than it (the juz'), is said to be the half, or the third, or the fourth part and so on, until we come to the tenth part. And a fractional part less than the tenth (e.g. 1/11 or 1/12) is not known as the juz'.⁴

§ 18. And (it is related) from him (Ja'far), on whom be peace, that concerning a man who bequeathed to another a sahm (undefined portion) from his third, he (Ja'far) said: 'Let a sixth part of it (the bequeathable third) be given to him because the word sahm is applied to one of six parts.'⁵

² In English we would say: 'Everything may be divided into ten portions.'

³ Lit. 'on this side of it'. That is, where the denominator of the fraction is less than 10.

§ 19 § 19.¹ And (it is related) from 'Alī² and Abū Ja'far³ and Abū 'Abdi'l-lāh,⁴ on whom be peace, that they said, 'There shall be no bequest to an heir'. And so far as our knowledge goes, there is consensus of opinion regarding this point. And if bequest were permissible to the heir, verily a greater portion than that which has been fixed by God would be bequeathable to him. And he who bequeaths to his heir, verily belittles the decision of God concerning him (the heir), and acts in contravention of His Book, may its mention be honoured; and he who acts contrary to the Book of Allāh, may its mention be honoured, acts unlawfully.

And a saying attributed to Ja'far b. Muḥammad has created a doubt in the minds of some of those who adopt his view. And it is this: when he was asked concerning a man who had made a bequest in favour of his relations, he answered that it was lawful because of the words of God, *If he leave any goods, the legacy is to his parents, [183 a] and to his kinsmen.*⁵

Imām, in the other the dictum of an illustrious judge, which is final. According to M-B, sahm may also mean one-eighth. •

¹ §§ 19, 20, and 21 may also be found in JBBRAS for 1929, pp. 141-145. But I have carefully revised the translation and made numerous changes, as I found that the earlier rendering was in many respects defective.

² I first thought that this was Zainu'l-'Ābidīn, the third Imām. The Ismā'īlis, as is well known, consider Ḥasan as the first Imām, Ḥusain as the second, 'Alī Zainu'l-'Ābidīn as the third, Muḥammad al-Bāqir as the fourth, and Ja'far aṣ-Ṣādiq as the fifth, and so on. 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib, the first Imām of the Twelvers, is given a higher position as Wasi, who comes immediately after Nabi (prophet), and is therefore not generally designated as a mere Imām, but the Mustadrak adds the words Amīru'l-Mu'minīn, thus indicating that 'Alī I was meant here.

⁴ Ja'far aṣ-Ṣādiq, the sixth Imām according to the usual, and the fifth according to the Ismā'īlī computation.

⁵ 2, 176. See also Muhammad Ali's translation, 2, 180 and particularly, footnote 223, where he discusses this point; and Baidāwī, ed. Fleischer, i. 10018 et seq.

And that which we have related from him¹ and from his pure ancestors, is more authentic and there is consensus (of opinion) about it among the Muslims. §§ 19-21

§ 20. And from the Prophet, may God bless him and his progeny, that he said 'There shall be no bequest to an heir'. God has assigned to the persons entitled to inherit their specific shares. And if that opinion which has been handed down from Ja'far b. Muḥammad and mentioned by us latterly is authentic, then by 'parents and kinsmen' he (Ja'far) meant persons other than heirs, such as those relations who do not inherit; because he who is nearer in degree excludes them, like parents who are slaves or polytheists. And we have mentioned above in an earlier portion that a slave can be purchased² from the inheritance of his master; then he is freed, and (as a free man) inherits the rest. And we shall discuss this matter fully hereinafter, if God pleases.³

And it is probable that the meaning of bequests to parents and relations, in reason (or according to usage)⁴ is, as God has laid down in the Qur'ān, that is, that portion of the property to which they are entitled according to the laws of inheritance. And this is proper.⁵ For instance, a man who, when faced with death, bequeaths his property to his heirs in accordance with the shares fixed for them by law; or hands over to them their specific shares, according to the command of God, lest they quarrel over it (the inheritance) after his death; or that some may deny to others what is due to them on account of their relationship.

§ 21. And it has been handed down from Ja'far b. Muḥammad that concerning a present (aḥiya) to an heir and a

§§ 21-24 gift (hiba) made during the course of the disease from which the maker of the present or the donor of the gift dies, he (Ja'far) said that such dispositions were not lawful. And this confirms what we have said before.¹

§ 22. [183 b] And from Ja'far b. Muḥammad that, when he was asked concerning a man who in his death-illness had admitted his indebtedness to one amongst his heirs, he (Ja'far) replied : ' It is necessary to look into the position of the person who admits. If he is a just man free from unfairness, his admission is lawful. If however he is not so, then his admission is not permissible, unless the heirs allow it.'

§ 23. And from 'Ali, the blessings of God on him, that he said : ' The Prophet decreed the debt before the legacy ; while you read (in the Qur'ān): After payment of the bequests [they bequeath] or of their debts.'²

§ 24. And from Ḥakam b. 'Uyaina, who said : ' I was sitting at the door of Abū Ja'far (Muḥammad al-Bāqir) when a woman approached and said : " Ask permission of Abū Ja'far for me (to see him)." She was asked, " And what do you want from him ? " She said, " I desire to ask him a question ". She was told : " Here is Ḥakam, the lawyer of 'Irāq. Ask him." Then she said : " Verily my husband died and left a thousand dirhams. Now I had a claim against him for 500 dirhams for my dower. So I took my dower, and then I took my share of the inheritance. Afterwards a man came and said, ' He (the deceased) owes me 1,000 dirhams ' ; and as I knew of this I testified to it." Ḥakam said, " Wait until I think over your question and make the necessary calculation ". He began calculating and while he was at it, Imām Muḥammad al-Bāqir came out (of the house) and said : “ What is this, O Ḥakam, §§ 24–27 which is causing your fingers to move ? ” He (Ḥakam) informed him, and before he could finish what he had to say, the Imām said : “ She should acknowledge his right as to two-thirds [184 a] of what is in her hands, and there is no inheritance to her until she pays him off.”¹

§ 25. And from ‘Alī² and Muḥammad al-Bāqir, on whom both be the blessings of God : a man makes a bequest to a person who at the time (of bequest) is absent, and then the testator dies without altering his will. It is found later that the legatee had died before the testator. They (the Imāms) said : ‘ Such a legacy is void. Now if the legatee were absent when the bequest was made to him, and thereafter the legatee died after the testator, further inquiry is necessary. If the legatee had accepted the legacy, then it goes to his own heirs ; whereas if he had not accepted it, it goes to the heirs of the testator.’³

§ 26. And from Muḥammad al-Bāqir and Ja‘far aṣ-Ṣādiq that they told a man, that he could cancel his will, both in health and in disease ; and he could alter it as he wished, for in this matter he was entitled to follow his own choice. And that (bequest) upon which the man dies,⁴ is to be taken out of his (bequeathable) third.

§ 27. And from ‘Alī² and Muḥammad al-Bāqir and Ja‘far aṣ-Ṣādiq, on all of whom be the blessings of God, that they said : ‘ When a man bequeaths a legacy, the legacy is to be paid out of his third, and this although the bequest is made

¹ The one thousand dirhams are to be divided into three parts, 2 to be given to the creditor and 1 to the wife, in discharge of her dower-debt. This division is in proportion to their respective claims, viz. 1,000 and 500 dirhams. Thereafter the widow may pay off the debts of the husband out of her other property ; but in any case there is no inheritance to her so long as this claim remains unsatisfied.

§§ 27-29 in favour of a Jew or a Christian, and whatever the object of the bequest. Now verily this must be done on account of the word of God, *But he who alters it (the legacy) after that he has heard it,—the sin thereof is only upon those who alter it.*¹ They (the three Imāms) mean hereby, that this command applies when the testator acts in the matter of the bequest according to what is permissible for the living Muslim to do. And if the testator bequeaths in a manner other than what is permissible, then this is not lawful.

§ 28. And from Ja'far aṣ-Ṣādiq, on whom be peace, that he was asked concerning a man who made a bequest for a pilgrimage,² and his executor utilized the bequest for (emancipating) a slave. He said [184 b]: 'The executor should be compelled to pay to the extent to which he has acted contrary to the testator's wish, and the legacy is to be spent according to the testator's will.'

§ 29. And from him (Ja'far aṣ-Ṣādiq), on whom be peace, that he said: 'Fāṭima, the daughter of Asad son of Hāshim, the mother of 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib, made a dying injunction to the Prophet and said, "O Prophet, set free my female slave, so and so". The Prophet said: "Verily you will recover (in the next world) what you have given away of your property."³ When she died the Prophet stopped at her grave before she was laid in it, and said (to those around): "Wait." Then he, the blessings of God be on him, descended and reclined in her grave, and came out and said: "Lower her. I did what I did desiring only that God may increase (His mercy) on her."⁴ For

³ God will requite you for your gifts of charity.

⁴ The Prophet reclined in the grave seemingly for the purpose of saving the lady from the rigours of the عذاب القبر, the travail of the grave, which every individual has to suffer before he faces God. It would appear that the angel, whose duty it is to castigate the soul of the dead person, would be moved to pity her because the Prophet had also lain in the same grave.

verily no one profited me as much as she and Abū Ṭālib did.” §§ 29–32
 And the Prophet undertook the execution of her will, and gave effect to it in accordance with her desire.’

§ 30. And from Ja‘far aṣ-Ṣādiq that he said : ‘ When a man bequeaths a legacy to another, the legatee has the option either of accepting or rejecting the legacy, if he (the legatee) is present. Now if he refuses it in the presence of the testator, the legacy can never belong to him. But if a bequest is made to him while he was absent and thereafter the testator dies, in this case it is not necessary to decline the legacy (expressly). For when the testator died, the legacy became a right amongst the rights of God,¹ the Glorious and Exalted.’

§ 31. And from him (Ja‘far), on whom be peace, that he said : ‘ If a man bequeaths one-third of his property to his slave, then let the slave be valued. If the third part thus bequeathed is less in value than the price of the slave, but not less than one-fourth of the said price, the slave shall be emancipated to the extent of the legacy, and he is free to emancipate himself fully by paying off the difference.² And if the third is in excess of the price [185 a] of the slave, the slave is emancipated and the excess shall be given to him. And if he is not emancipated except to the extent of less than the sixth part (the legacy being less in value than one-sixth of the slave’s price), there shall be no legacy to him.’³

§ 32. And from ‘Ali, on whom be peace, that he was asked about the bequests made by, and the legacies given to,

¹ And is therefore to be distributed with reference to the rules of Farā’iḍ (Inheritance and Succession).

² For example, the price of the slave is 400 dīnārs. The bequeathable third is 100 dīnārs (the testator dying possessed of property worth 300 dīnārs), but not less. In this case the slave is emancipated to the proportionate extent. He may for instance be free each day for a quarter of the day, and so forth.

§§ 32-35 slaves who are to be emancipated by instalments.¹ He said : 'The legacy is valid to the extent which is necessary for manumitting him.' This is a brief statement (of the law), and we have fully explained it in the chapter on 'Freed Slaves' (mukātabūn). And the meaning is that this applies to him who has not contracted that if he fails (in any condition or as to any instalment), he returns to the condition of slavery. But as for him who makes this condition, his position is the same as that of a slave in this respect, until he pays off the last instalment of his debt. And we have mentioned the point about legacies to slaves in the preceding section.²

§ 33. And from 'Alī and Muḥammad al-Bāqir and Ja'far aṣ-Ṣādiq, on whom be the blessings of God, that they said : 'There shall be no bequest to the slave.'³

§ 34. And from Ja'far aṣ-Ṣādiq, that he said : 'When a man bequeaths,—that is, bequeaths in excess of the third—and the heirs allow him to do so in his lifetime, and then after his death, they realize the true state of affairs, they have no right to repudiate (the legacies).'⁴

§ 35. And from him (Ja'far) that he said : 'Umāma—the daughter of Abū'l-ʿĀṣ, son of Rabi' and of Zainab, daughter of the Prophet, whom 'Alī married after Fāṭima, and whom

² Cf. § 31. Two possibilities are here contemplated : (i) that a slave may pay a portion of his price and be emancipated to that extent at least, even if he pays no more. For instance, he may free himself for one day in the week by paying off one-seventh of his price. Or (ii) the condition may be that there is to be no proportionate emancipation at all. For instance, that until the last instalment is paid, the slave is not free to any extent whatsoever, or that if he defaults in paying an instalment, he returns to his former condition of absolute slavery.

³ This is a curious riwāya and seems to be inconsistent with § 31. The gloss in C which adds the proviso 'save in the manner aforesaid' is therefore very significant.

⁴ On this point the Ismā'īlīs agree with the Twelvers and differ from the Ḥanafīs, among whom such consent can only be given after, and not before, the death of the testator.

al-Mughira b. Naufal married after 'Ali—became ill and lost her power of speech. Hasan and Husain then came to her, and despite Mughira's [185 b] aversion, began speaking to her, "You have emancipated so and so", and she nodded, signifying her assent. And they said: "You have given in charity for such and such a cause", and she nodded assent; and thus she died. And they (Hasan and Husain) held her bequests to be lawful.' ¹

§ 36. And Ja'far as-Ṣādiq said: 'A sign, when it is understood as signifying a bequest, is permissible in the case of one who is unable to speak.'

§ 37. And from him (Ja'far), that concerning a man who made a bequest of a hundred dinārs from which a slave-girl was to be manumitted, and she was found to be of less value, he said: 'The excess is to be returned to the slave-girl, if the testator has specifically mentioned her by name. But if he has used general words in respect of her,² then it is the duty of the executor to buy (and emancipate) a slave-girl worth a hundred dinārs, if he finds one in accord with the terms of the bequest.'

§ 38. And from him (Ja'far) that if a man who is indebted were to bequeath to another, and the executor were to take away the debt from the bulk of the testator's property, and take possession of it by sending it to his own house, and (thereafter) divide the residue among the heirs and give effect to the legacies: and afterwards if the property were to be stolen from the testator's house, Ja'far said: 'The executor will be held liable for the property, because he had no right to take possession of the property of creditors without their authority.'

§ 39. And from him (Ja'far) that he was asked concerning suicide. He said: 'If the bequest (or will) is made after

² If it is generally stated that a slave-girl worth 100 dinārs is to be freed.

§§ 39-44 he caused the new state of affairs¹ to happen to himself and which killed him, then his will (or bequest) is not permissible.'

§ 40. And from him (Ja'far) that he said : ' A man bequeaths legacies and then dies. Previous to this he had already remitted maintenance (moneys) for a certain period to his family.² Whatever remains over, after (deducting the maintenance moneys) till the day of his death, is inheritance ; and legacies will be paid [186 a] out of it.'

§ 41. And from 'Alī, on whom be peace, who said : ' Nothing can deprive the executor of his executorship, except loss of reason or apostasy or prodigality or dishonesty or abandoning the sunna.³ And the Sultan is the executor of him who has no executor, and the guardian of him who has no guardian.'

§ 42. And from Muḥammad al-Bāqir that he said : ' If the testator permits the executor to carry on trade with the money belonging to his infant children, then he is entitled to do so, and there is no responsibility on him in case of loss. And if the testator has permitted the executor to take the profits, then the condition is valid and binding.'

§ 43. And from Ja'far aṣ-Ṣādiq that he said : ' When an executor carries on trade with the money of an orphan, and this right was not given to him by the will, then he stands surety for the loss that ensues, while the profit goes to the orphan.'

§ 44. And from Ja'far that he said : ' A person makes a will and leaves heirs who are absent, and the executor takes the matter to the qāḍī. Verily the qāḍī shall appoint an agent, who, jointly with the executor, shall take charge of the shares of the absent ones on division' [186 a₁₂].

¹ That is, after he had begun the commission of the act which ultimately caused his death.
